Beck hyperspace album cover car

Beck follows the brilliant Colors of 2017 with a new album Hyperspace, released in November. Hyperspace is Beck's 14th album (he has not yet released any kind of best of) and co-produced much of the album with Pharrell Williams (who also co-wrote some tracks). Chris Martin and Sky Ferreira contribute backing vocals on a lead track ('Star' and 'Die Waiting') respectively) and Greg Kurstin gets a writing credit on See Through, suggesting it dates back to collaborations. Beck's longtime bandmates Jason Falkner, Smokekey Hornel and Roger Manning Jr. (Jason and Roger are half of Jellyfish's original line-up) are also featured on much of the album. You can preview the days without events above to get an impression of hyperspace's new sound. Nice to see some excellent covers - to change - in a new album! Hyperspace will be released on November 22, 2019. YOUR CHOICES Indie legend Beck has finally announced a november 22 release date for his upcoming album Hyperspace, which will be released by Capitol Records. Beck also shared a new song titled Uneventful Days, one of seven tracks from the upcoming album with production, and songwriting credits from famous Neptunes producer Pharrell Williams. This latest release features a glittering electronic production, with traditional-style drum beats, sparkling keys and synth lines, which the singer completes with a subdued vocal performance. The song bears the essence of the cover of the new album, with Beck in front of a classic red car, with katakana letters channeling aesthetics Beck debuted Saw Lightning, the first single from this recent project in April. This track was used in the Beats by Dr. Dre Powerbeats Pro campaign, and was also co-written and co-produced by Williams, with whom Beck wanted to collaborate for decades. Decades. I've been waiting for 20 years. Beck started before continuing, this is very different from any situation I've made music in. There is a very particular energy and things happen very quickly. It's fully open, so everything's fine. Everything is fine, inspiration strikes and everything happens incredibly fast. There's not a lot of second guesses, which is great. Artist Colors' most recent album debuted in 2017 and brought together its eclectic mix of various genres ranging from dance-rock to experimental pop. Hyperspace 1. Hyperlife 2. Days without events 3. It was released on Capitol Records on November 22, 2019. [3] The album was produced primarily by Beck and Pharrell Williams,[4] as well as Cole M.G.N., Greg Kurstin, and Paul Epworth. It was preceded by the release of the single Saw Lightning on April 15, 2019,[1] the track Hyperlife, as well as the second single Uneventful Days on October 17, 2019.[4] and the third single Dark Places on November 7, 2019. Background Beck stated that he had some things after finishing the tour for Colors, and that he wanted to seize the moment by working on his project with Williams after Williams had asked Beck to work on an N.E.R.D. album, also revealing that their collaboration would initially be a single or an EP, but I think we were both surprised when there was a body of work here. On October 10, 2019, Beck released the album cover on Instagram, which features the title in katakana (ハイクラスペース). [7] Variety writer A. D. Amorosi wrote that Beck and Pharrell Williams find new life in minimalist synth-pop and on the album, hypothesized that the hard-to-hold hooks and spaciousness of Hyperspace are what makes it so intriguing.
